

EXAMPLES REMOTE DELIVERY

DaySpring Villa

DaySpring Villa in Sand Springs, Oklahoma is a faith-based shelter for women and their families impacted by domestic violence and sex trafficking. The Center has been working with DaySpring Villa amidst the reopening of the state and the staff members' return to their office and shelter. To help balance the staff's workload during the transition, the Center scheduled biweekly calls to develop training content and materials in short, manageable increments. During these calls, the Center's team used a visual collaboration software to brainstorm, share ideas, and incorporate feedback.

HopeWorks

HopeWorks of Howard County, Maryland provides services to women, men, and children impacted by domestic violence and sexual assault. Before COVID-19, the Center planned to accompany HopeWorks on three local peer exchanges with victim service providers to explore program models. With the shift to remote delivery, the potential organizations with whom HopeWorks could meet expanded. The Center was able to connect HopeWorks with teams in Los Angeles, New York City, and Philadelphia through collaborative, online meetings where they shared lessons learned over webcam and exchanged resources in real-time.

Northwest Indiana Anti-Trafficking Coalition

The Northwest Indiana Anti-Trafficking Coalition is a survivor-led coalition of over sixty members. The Center convened a remote site visit to review the mission, vision, and collateral and to identify and prioritize the coalition's goals as a critical first step in the strategic planning process. The flexibility of a virtual site visit enabled all Center staff and consultants to participate in a single working session and for the Northwest Indiana Anti-Trafficking Coalition to involve various working group perspectives in the remote discussions.

Zoë Ministries

Zoë Ministries is a faith-based organization, serving adolescent females who have been sex trafficked. In helping Zoë Ministries develop a sustainment strategy, the Center planned a series of six two-hour remote working sessions. After each session, the Center team assigned homework based on the aspect of the session that Zoë Ministries identified as most challenging, such as writing program goals and developing a notional budget. Zoë Ministries used the time in between sessions to complete the tasks, allowing the Center team to provide feedback and build off the assignments in each subsequent session.
